

Funeral Planning Checklist

DETERMINE WHO CAN LEGALLY PLAN THE FUNERAL

Laws about who can make decisions about the funeral vary by state. In general, the responsibility first falls on a person chosen by the deceased in writing. If that person isn't available or if the deceased didn't designate someone, the responsibility tends to go to the next of kin.

LOCATE FUNERAL WISHES OR PRE-ARRANGEMENTS

If your loved one prepared their wishes ahead of time, determine what paperwork has been created and where it's stored.

Look for a/an:

Funeral directive

Advance directive

Form of disposition

If your loved one did not leave any of these documents behind, you may need to make educated guesses about their desires.

According to the Funeral Consumers Alliance, funerals cost an average of nearly $8,000.

If your loved one pre-planned a funeral, they may have already paid for some or all the expenses. However, if they didn't pay for it already, you need to figure out who is paying for the funeral, and how.

Remember, those paying for the funeral are not obligated to go into debt. Determine your final budget and then prioritize wishes in order of importance.

DETERMINE THE CITY OF THE FUNERAL AND BURIAL

You'll need to decide where the loved one's funeral and burial will be.

These can be different cities or the same one. For instance, they may currently live in a city where most of their loved ones are, but they may want to be laid to rest in a different location.

RESEARCH FUNERAL SERVICES AND HIRE A FUNERAL DIRECTOR

Hiring a funeral director isn't always required (though some states mandate them for at-home funerals), but they can function as an event planner and legal advisor, helping walk you through the steps of planning a funeral.

A funeral director may also have partnerships with some vendors or rental spaces and help get you decent deals on things you need. However, be sure you're clear about your budget and monitor it alongside them.
