EDUCATING for CHARACTER

Increasingly, educators at colleges and universities are recognizing the importance of educating for that elusive thing called character. But their efforts are often piecemeal—a service learning program here, a residential contract there. Here's what a comprehensive approach to character education might look like.

CHARACTER EDUCATION is a hot topic, widely discussed in academic, political, and lay arenas. The tragic murders at Columbine High School merely underscore what most educators already recognize, that our schools are not adequately serving the moral development needs of our society and citizens. Moreover, the efforts that are being undertaken are devoted mostly to elementary and secondary school character education, with relatively little attention paid to character on U.S. college campuses. The Character Education Partnership, the predominant advocacy organization for character education in the United States, for example, has chosen not to focus on postsecondary applications even though it supports such efforts in principle. This is not to say that nothing is being done at colleges and universities, but it is our contention that there is not enough attention paid to character development in this nation's institutions of higher learning—either on the part of campus educators or the general public.

There are many reasons for this. Many faculty are hesitant to influence student character, and students are often resistant to such attempts. Those in higher education often balk at what they may view as tampering with students' morality. To these objections we offer the
