

FREUD'S ICEBERG MODEL

Freud's psychoanalytic theory divides the personality into three parts: the ID, ego, and superego. A common analogy to explain this is the iceberg model.

EGO

The Conscious

Role: The ego is the rational, conscious part of personality that mediates between the demands of the id and the moral standards of the superego. It operates on the reality principle.

Example: The ego would be the part of the mind that decides to go to work, even though the id might want to skip work to go to the beach.

SUPEREGO

The Preconscious

Role: The superego is the moral component of personality that acts as a conscience. It is divided into two parts: the conscience, which punishes the ego for bad actions, and the ideal, which sets the ego's goals for good behavior.

Example: The superego would be the part of the mind that tells the ego to go to work, even though the id might want to skip work to go to the beach.

ID

The Unconscious

Role: The id is the primitive, instinctual part of personality that operates on the pleasure principle. It is entirely unconscious and seeks immediate gratification of its desires.

Example: The id would be the part of the mind that wants to skip work to go to the beach, even though the ego might want to go to work.
