Incarceration and Father-absence Dionne Anna Peniston,2014 Each year close to 400 000 fathers leave prison and return home yet little is known about the experiences of fathers who attempt to reconnect with their children post release The lack of attention to the reunification experiences of formerly incarcerated fathers is surprising since recent evidence show the important role that fathers play in the lives of their children Even more several studies indicate that a strong father child bond is effective in reducing male recidivism The inability of fathers to reconnect with their children after prison not only has implications for fathers and children but also exacerbates the problem of absent fathers This research contributes to the developing literature on the reunification experiences of fathers after prison Using an interpretative phenomenological approach twenty one parolee fathers were interviewed Findings show that fathers face several challenges after their release from prison Fathers who had reconnected with their children discovered that their young children were afraid of them their older children lacked trust in them or that another father figure had replaced them Some fathers found it difficult to reform the father child bond or to re assume parental authority over their children On the other hand several fathers failed to reconnect with their children due to the unwillingness of children s mothers their own fear of being rearrested for non payment of child support or their decision to delay reunification until they were able to provide financial support Fathers believed that given their many challenges their fathering needs were not addressed in prison or upon their release Fathers identified several useful reunification services including parenting and co parenting classes counseling legal assistance family oriented programs and a service to locate children Findings underscore the need for more serious research and program attention to be directed to offending fathers and Method asks scholars policy makers advocates and practitioners to rethink family reentry in a new light to seek to understand both the urgent and intolerable loss as well as the real and present potential of families There are almost one million parents of minor aged children currently serving time in U S prisons most of them fathers Based on post phenomenological analyses William Muth offers a new framework for conceptualizing family reentry as a present phenomenon It seeks to reveal the intense ways incarcerated fathers and their families live their present absence and draws on these intensities to define a new role for researchers and practitioners nurturing the potential of families in the here and now The current situation is intolerable A credible family reentry approach is urgently needed This book is an attempt to address these families as they potentially are and might become if we would be willing to meet them half way in the words of the poet Alice Fulton

Dangerous Masculinity Anna Curtis,2019-09-06 For incarcerated fathers prison rather than work mediates access to their families Prison rules and staff regulate phone privileges access to writing materials and visits Perhaps even more important are the ways in which the penal system shapes men s gender performances Incarcerated men must negotiate how they will enact violence and aggression both in terms of the expectations placed upon inmates by the prison system and in terms of their own responses to these expectations Additionally the relationships between incarcerated men and the mothers of their children change particularly since women now serve as gatekeepers who control when and how they contact their children This book considers how those within the prison system negotiate their expectations about real men and good fathers how prisoners negotiate their relationships with those outside of prison and in what ways this negotiation reflects their understanding of masculinity
