

The Benefits of Implementing a Fault Detection and Diagnosis System in Manufacturing

The manufacturing sector is booming! However, it also involves complex tasks and procedures that should be executed with precision. Products can be defective and wasteful when manufacturing mistakes are made. Early fault detection and diagnosis can help prevent these issues, resulting in higher-quality products and reduced waste.

What is fault detection and diagnosis?

The fault detection and diagnosis process (FDD) involves monitoring and analyzing a system or equipment to detect and diagnose deviations or abnormalities from its normal behavior. FDD is used to detect faults or anomalies as early as possible, determine their causes, and provide recommendations for resolving them before further damage can be done.

Manufacturers who aim to improve operational efficiency, reduce energy consumption, and increase system reliability should leverage FDD technology.
