Environmental Factor:

Environmental Factors, Genes, and the Development of Human Cancers Deodutta Roy, M. Tevfik Dorak, 2010-09-11
Cancer is a complex disease. Only 5-10% of human cancers are hereditary in nature. Many of us think of environmental agents when we think of carcinogens. The environment includes all that surrounds us and environmental influences include not only chemical, physical, and biological toxicants but also diet and lifestyle. In this broadest sense, the environment contributes substantially in the development of human cancer. This book will describe how environment contributes to malignant transformation leading to profound changes in the genetic and signaling networks that control the functioning of the cell. It will critically discuss the understanding of the effects of environment on the development, progression, and metastasis of cancer with current knowledge of the signaling networks that support functioning of transformed human cells. Genes and environmental factors that influence the origins of cancer are not necessarily the same as those that contribute to its progression and metastasis. Susceptibility gene variants for each specific cancer are being identified with emerging evidence of gene-environment interaction. Gene-environment interactions will be discussed through each specific cancer-based approach to address the question of how genetic variations can influence susceptibility to the individual type of cancer. It will also highlight and summarize epigenetic changes that increase the risk for susceptibility to a particular type of cancer, particularly in the presence of specific environmental factors. Thus, this book will contain chapters from the world's experts focused on the current evidences that support the role of environment in the cancer etiology and in the growth of malignant lesions and discuss who may be susceptible to environmental influences. Valuing the Environment: Methodological and Measurement Issues Rüdiger Pethig, 2013-03-14
During the last decades, environmental economics as a science has been very successful in improving our understanding of environment-economy interdependence. Using conventional economic methodology, environmental aspects have been explicitly incorporated into economic models, making use of the concept of externality. This concept was already familiar to economists long before evidence of severe environmental deterioration found its way into the headlines and people's awareness. But before that time, external effects were not considered as being empirically very relevant; they seemed to be like the example of the bees and the fruit trees, somewhat bucolic in nature. All that changed dramatically when it was no longer possible or easy to ignore the large-scale environmental disruption with its negative feedback on consumers and producers caused by growing pollution and excessive use of environmental resources. In diagnosing the discrepancy between private and social cost as the cause of the problem, the externality paradigm proved very useful. The correct diagnosis implies the straightforward cure to internalise all external cost, namely the damage cost of pollution. But it is one thing to identify the qualitative nature of the problem at an abstract conceptual level and quite another thing to place specific money values on pollution damage and society's valuation of the environment respectively in the context of specific pollution control problems. Very often it is controversial not only how inefficient the no policy situation is but also what exactly the net benefit of any public action of reducing pollution is.

Transforming African Food Systems Claire Helen Quinn, Andrew John Dougill, Julian Douglas May, 2025-10-24. Overcoming Africa's development challenges cannot be uncoupled from the need to transform the continent's food systems. One in four people in sub-Saharan Africa faces food insecurity and Africa will need to produce 80% more food by 2050. The challenge is complicated by the interrelationship between agriculture and environmental sustainability. In addition, agriculture also remains one of the most effective pathways out of poverty on the continent. As agriculture both contributes to and is affected by climate change, there is a pressing need for innovation in climate-smart agriculture that considers the environment as integral to the food system. However, access to nutritious, safe food and improved livelihoods does not solely depend on boosting agricultural productivity. Food systems encompass the activities and actors involved in all aspects of the food supply chain, from production through to consumption and disposal of food. A food systems research approach recognises the importance of interactions and relationships between activities, actors, and thus the importance of interdisciplinary approaches for achieving transformative change. The concerted and coordinated actions of the food industry, agriculture, production and processing, retail, food service sector, and waste disposal and consumers are crucial to promote sustainable consumption and production with a focus on reducing all forms of food losses throughout the entire supply chain. Food systems transformation needs to focus not just on increasing production but on access to food and markets, nutrition, diversity, and security, climate resilience, and adaptation of both agro-ecological systems and the food system more broadly. This Research Topic focuses specifically on transformation of African food systems. While comprising many similar activities, actors, to other food systems, African food systems also have activities, actors, and conditions that are specific to the African context. These contextual factors include a shared history of colonisation that creates specific historical, demographic, political, and socio-cultural drivers of change, value chains that are often short and reliant on informal exchange and small-scale operations, distinct territorial imbalances that create significant inequalities, and normative and cognitive institutions that create diverse cultural beliefs and values while influencing the roles of women and youth in food systems. We welcome submission of original research articles, case studies, systematic reviews, or meta-analysis that offer new insights and perspectives on African food systems transformation. This topic will bring together interdisciplinary research and practice and provide a platform for knowledge exchange, collaboration, and collective action for transforming African food systems so that they are equitable, resilient, and sustainable.
