

Part 12: Greatness to Spare

Page 14

If they're converging, it might cause some confusion. Neither Kael nor Albazem will know for sure what they're getting into.

Not enough for us to turn to our advantage, though. Invisibility is our only realistic hope.

So, you two actually fought your way out of their camp? Did you get to see him with a sword?

Yeah, I was amazed. And he is an incredible swordsman. But he isn't the greatest, like he claimed. Kael was better.

He wasn't better; he was just... unexpected.

You couldn't do anything to him.

But Kael... yeah, he's great with a sword. As strong as a bull, although not even slightly slowed by his mass, and can put all kinds of power behind his swing. But he just didn't present any weaknesses. Nothing I could take advantage of. He wasn't better than me, but the thing I'm best at, he wasn't particularly vulnerable to at all.

Even if he had been, there are just too many of them to beat. This whole war, Nockmaar's numbers have just been too much to overcome.

It was... look, normally, I'm pretty good at reading weaknesses in my opponents. Little tells, like dropped shoulders, their weight balanced poorly, something that I can exploit. The average person, I can read in seconds. Almost instinctively. I... well, you saw how fast I was cutting through those men in the mountains.

He'd beaten twenty of them in minutes, though. I'll give him credit where credit's due.

Thanks, peck.
