Red Brain, Green Brain Melissa Ferrier, 2017-10. Cracking the code to wellbeing and resilience is a topic of relevance for individuals across the lifespan and preventative and early intervention is the key. This is best placed to occur during childhood where the dynamics of neural plasticity can be harnessed for extraordinary outcomes. In building a smart Green brain we need an approach that makes it fun. This book is for educators and clinicians interested in the neuroscience of mental health but it is valuable for anyone operating within any kind of social network. This book outlines the story of Red2Green a clinical approach to mental health that is based on evolutionary neuroscience over 90 million years of fine tuning a primitive and highly visual fast Red brain that is shared with our mammalian ancestors. All mammals are wired to survive in the non verbal right hemisphere and the training ground for this begins in utero and unfolds over the course of the first 18 months of life. Indeed this training ground is centred around reciprocal eye contact between the parent and infant where the infant learns information relating to surviving and thriving. Reciprocal eye contact paves the way for learning language and achieving a range of cognitive milestones long before the first words and phrases are even spoken but importantly it lays the foundation for skills in the regulation of stress that are used across the lifespan. When skills in the regulation of stress go awry wellbeing and resilience are compromised. Red2Green is an inherently visual approach that uses the remarkable power of the visual system for understanding how to build a smart Green brain and outsmart the ancient parts of our Red brain that overall we still actually need.
