Excessive Measures:

Potential Theory on Locally Compact Abelian Groups C. van den Berg, G. Forst, 2012-12-06 Classical potential theory can be roughly characterized as the study of Newtonian potentials and the Laplace operator on the Euclidean space \mathbb{R}^3 . It was discovered around 1930 that there is a profound connection between classical potential theory and the theory of Brownian motion. The Brownian motion is determined by its semigroup of transition probabilities. The Brownian semigroup and the connection between classical potential theory and the theory of Brownian motion can be described analytically in the following way: The Laplace operator is the infinitesimal generator for the Brownian semigroup and the Newtonian potential kernel is the integral of the Brownian semigroup with respect to time. This connection between classical potential theory and the theory of Brownian motion led Hunt and Hunt [2] to consider general potential theories defined in terms of certain stochastic processes or equivalently in terms of certain semigroups of operators on spaces of functions. The purpose of the present exposition is to study such general potential theories where the following aspects of classical potential theory are preserved: i) The theory is defined on a locally compact abelian group; ii) The theory is translation invariant in the sense that any translate of a potential or a harmonic function is again a potential respectively a harmonic function. This property of classical potential theory can also be expressed by saying that the Laplace operator is a differential operator with constant coefficients.

Probability Theory Lucien Marie Le Cam, Jerzy Neyman, Elizabeth L. Scott, 1972 Potential Theory and Right Processes Lucian Beznea, Nicu Boboc, 2004-07-28 This book develops the potential theory starting from a sub Markovian resolvent of kernels on a measurable space covering the context offered by a right process with general state space. It turns out that the main results from the classical cases e.g. on locally compact spaces with Green functions have meaningful extensions to this setting. The study of the strongly supermedian functions and specific methods like the Revuz correspondence for the largest class of measures and the weak duality between two sub Markovian resolvents of kernels are presented for the first time in a complete form. It is shown that the quasi regular semi Dirichlet forms fit in the weak duality hypothesis. Further results are related to the subordination operators and measure perturbations. The subject matter is supplied with a probabilistic counterpart involving the homogeneous random measures multiplicative left and co natural additive functionals. The book is almost self contained being accessible to graduate students.

Markov Processes and Related Problems of Analysis E. B. Dynkin, 1982-09-23 The theory of Markov Processes has become a powerful tool in partial differential equations and potential theory with important applications to physics. Professor Dynkin has made many profound contributions to the subject and in this volume are collected several of his most important expository and survey articles. The content of these articles has not been covered in any monograph as yet. This account is accessible to graduate students in mathematics and operations research and will be welcomed by all those interested in stochastic processes and their applications.
