

Chapter 1

Introduction: Family law in 21st century South Africa

1. Different types of families

- Single mother and single fathers
 - The complexity of the modern family has been summed up as follows: 'contemporary patterns of marriage, divorce and remarriage produce father-child units as well as mother-child units and remarriage families with stepmothers as well as remarriage with stepfathers.
 - In SA, it appears that most children grow up in extended- family households.
- Extended families
 - The primary reason for these household demographics is labour migration, which involves both fathers and mothers.
 - Huber's family model does not fit well with the social and economic realities of most South African families.
- Polygynous families
 - Contemporary South African family law provides for polygyny: in some circumstances it is legal for a man to have more than one wife.
 - The recognition of Customary Marriages Act gives full legal recognition to existing and future customary Polygynous marriages.
 - The Act permits men to have more than one wife at the same time, thus allowing for Polygynous households.
 - The Draft Muslim Marriages Bill also allows for recognition of Polygynous marriages
 - SA family law has moved away from the notion that marriage can only take place between two people
- Unmarried families
- Same-sex families
 - In terms of common law, marriage was possible only between one man and one woman
 - In the 21st century, same sex couples are also entitled to enter into marriages
- Child-headed households
 - The children's Act provides that a household may be recognised as a 'child-headed household' if:
 - The parent, guardian or care-giver of the household is terminally ill, has died or abandoned the children in the household,
 - No adult family member is available to provide care for the children in the household,
 - A child over the age of 16 years has assumed the role of care-giver in respect of the children in the household
 - It is in the best interest of the children of the household
 - The child-headed household must function under the general supervision of an adult designated by the children's court, an organ of state, or non-governmental organisation determined by the provincial head of social development
