He who entered Hell a cavalier youth emerges white haired yet wiser in spirit having spent his life s years reviewing his rebellion against God This is the gist of this great dramatic narrative poem by Miller Told in thirty one cantos the poem narrates that a man s journey to Hell without God is a construct of illusions from which we awakens to true reality He goes by the name of The Sojourner What is actually a confession the scoffer s draconian experience begins with these words I choose the freedom and power of Hell s anarchy over the design and purpose of creation fraud A demon replies Wouldst thou perjure the devil my son gainst Hell s twisted race Spoke a Priest Demonic sin is our base sod Escape we not these rocks sensuous in sin our taste you but a mere suckling who contented with our god This strange parareality dialogue and story which some would call surreal is a fascinating account of the netherworld experience of a young scoffer against the Triune God of Scripture The work conveys a medieval sound of sacrifice and damnation Each Canto marks a step along The Sojourner s way The reader will find that there is no book quite like it in today s politically correct and realistic society
