Glimpses Of Life In Colonial Virginia:

The Old South Thomas Nelson Page, 1892 Virginia: The Old Dominion Various Authors, 2020-09-28 I wrote to you my dear sister from the pretty little town of Baltimore and I hope you have received my letter Although this so speedily follows it my only motives for writing are to occupy idle time and to relieve your mind from apprehension regarding my safety during my passage through all the terrors of Chesapeake Bay that long and dreadful inlet as you call it in which uncle Richard was shipwrecked twenty or thirty years ago Believe me all these dangers are imaginary This Chesapeake Bay is a very calm pleasant sheet of water which may have its storms sometimes but sheltered from the full force of the ocean by what is called the eastern shore has no terrors after passing the Atlantic I have not even a single adventure to tell Everything passed with provoking tranquillity and I must needs eke out my letter by any little observations borrowed from my journal which I fancy may amuse you I think I told you that I had engaged a passage to Norfolk in the schooner Mary Anne I believe half the ships in the world are called Mary Anne and doubtless it is a very safe sort of name There is nothing to be said against it and indeed my skipper assured me that he had never known a vessel of that name to be lost However if odours produce sympathies the Mary Anne would soon find her way down amongst the fishes for a more potent smell of herring never assailed my nose than when I entered the said vessel I had not been on board previous to the hour of sailing having taken my passage through our agent and certainly I was somewhat disappointed at the accommodation presented which had been previously depicted in very glowing colours but proved somewhat cramped and in no degree savoury Always take a steam boat when you can my dear sister for a short life and a merry one is a good axiom at sea and although steamers may rattle and smoke and shake they generally carry you to your destination sooner more pleasantly and more safely too than a sailing vessel Well we started from our wharf about half past two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon and I remained upon deck to take a last look at Baltimore which I quitted with some regret It is a smaller city than New York but cleaner neater and I should think more healthy Besides I had met some very pleasant and kind people there and civilities which would not affect one much in one's own country touch one in a foreign land When ties and old affections are left behind courtesies and civilities are the best substitutes The wind was quite favourable the master assured me and there was just enough of it to ripple the water and make the ship go quietly on without producing any rebellion of stomach or refractoriness of legs I remained upon deck till it was quite dark and more than one little star looked out with eager twinkling eyes as if it feared it should not have time enough to behold its own image in the waters before the sun rose and sent it to bed again I then went below and found the little cabin round which our berths were placed already tenanted by two gentlemen who had never appeared upon the deck since I first reached it and who were consuming time and brandy and water very nearly in silence Whether they had been thus employed for the preceding six or seven hours I know not and how much of the spirit they had drunk it was impossible to discover for they certainly were not tipsy and the brandy itself was entombed in a vast bottle called here a demijohn so curiously concealed in wickerwork that it is impossible for the keenest eyes to discover whether it is full or empty Both were well dressed men but very different in appearance from each other I must venture upon some description my dear sister as our ideas of the Yankee race in England are very unlike the realities which we see before us in this country I remember hearing a wealthy respectable foolish ignorant woman of a class such as frequently forces its way into society with us at home deliberately ask an American whom she knew to be such whether all the natives of America were salmon coloured She had doubtless heard of red Indians and I suppose with that brilliant confusion of ideas which trouble the brains of some ladies had confounded our brethren on this side of the Atlantic with the aborigines of the country However my two companions on the present occasion though one was not of American or Anglo Saxon race had nothing of the Indian about them One was a thin spare but well formed man about three and thirty years of age who from dress or appearance altogether no one would have distinguished from an Englishman had it not been for a certain jaunty well satisfied self reliant air not altogether consistent with our staid and more sober character of thought His face was by no means handsome God knows His eyes were somewhat protuberant round and sparkling his nose was short thickish and a little tinged with red which might have some affinity with the contents of the demijohn I have just mentioned His upper lip was shaded by a thick Austrian cut moustache his chin was prominent and decided but his forehead was bold high and towering and by far the finest feature of his face The other seemed rather overdressed certainly over dressed for a sea voyage but his face was actually much handsomer than that of his companion and presented the peculiar character which marks in almost every instance Jewish descent for he had large almond shaped dark eyes an aquiline nose a delicate mouth and chin and a profusion of glossy black hair floating in small light curls about his head His complexion was warm but delicate and altogether he was a very handsome man But he wanted that air of Oriental calmness and dignity which you and I have often remarked in many members of his race This I attribute greatly to the profession which I afterwards found he followed the debasing tendencies of which I can conceive no man s spirit resisting He had three diamond rings on one finger and a large brilliant in the frill of his shirt and indeed it seemed to me there was no part of his person on which he could stick such an ornament that was not garnished by some precious stone It was quite clear that no great cordiality existed between these two tenants of the cabin although they were drinking out of the same demijohn if not out of the same cup As soon as I entered the last mentioned passenger asked me in Virginian parlance to take a drink I have learnt the habits of the country sufficiently to know that it is discourteous to refuse and I was immediately provided with a tumbler and cold water to which I added some of the brandy When I had sipped a small quantity of the mixture the first passenger I have mentioned broke out in a short quick merry laugh and observed in a quaint tone that the skipper had failed to provide us with mint a usual accessory to brandy and water in this country With him I soon got into conversation and found him a well read liberally educated man of the world with very free notions upon a great number of subjects a taste for the arts and a tolerable store of Greek and Latin The other was more difficult to engage and indeed the task seemed hopeless for some time till at length the master of the vessel joined us and then I found out that our friend with the diamond rings had points upon which he was accessible also
