

From all available evidence no black man had ever set foot in this tiny Swiss village before I arrived. I was told before arriving that I would probably be a "sight" for the village. I took this to mean that people of my complexion were rarely seen in Switzerland, also that city people are always something of a "sight" outside of the city. It did not occur to me - possibly because I am an American - that there could be people anywhere who had never seen a Negro. It is a fact that cannot be explained on the basis of the inaccessibility of the village. The village is very high, but it is only four hours from Milan and three hours from Lausanne. It is true that it is virtually unknown. Few people making plans for a holiday would elect to come here. On the other hand, the villagers are able, presumably, to come and go as they please - which they do - to another town at foot of the mountain with a population of approximately five thousand, the nearest place to see a movie or go to the bank. In the village there is no movie theater, bank, no library, no theater, very few radios, one jeep, one station wagon, and at the moment, one typewriter, mine, an invention which the woman next door to me here had never seen. There are about six hundred people living here, all Catholic. I conclude this from the fact that the Catholic church is open all year round, whereas the Protestant church set on a hill a little removed from the village is open only in the summer time when the tourists arrive. There are four or five hotels, all closed now, and four or five distros, of which, however, only two do any business during the winter. These two do not do a great deal, for
