Firm For Life:

Firm Size, Life Cycle Dynamics and Growth Constraints: Evidence from Mexico Christian Saborowski, Florian Misch, 2019-05-02 This paper examines the variation in life cycle growth across the universe of Mexican firms We establish two stylized facts to motivate our analysis first we show that firm size matters for development by illustrating a close correlation with state level per capita incomes Second we show that few firms grow as much as their U S peers while the majority stagnates at less than twice their initial size To gain insights into the distinguishing characteristics of the two groups we then econometrically decompose life cycle growth across firms We find that firms that have financial access and multiple establishments and that are formal part of diversified industries and located in population centers can grow at sizeable rates
