CHAPTER SEVEN NOTES

Chapter 7: The Road to Revolution (1763-1776)

(I) The Unpopularity of the Revolution

- In 1763, the British government passed the Proclamation Line to settle the western land question.
- The western land question appeared but remained largely unimportant to the majority because neither side was directly affected.
 - Being across the Atlantic made it difficult to spread the news.
 - Settlers felt primarily and naturally responsible to their immediate neighbors without reference to the government, but the British were increasingly different from regular and independent.
 - Many loyalists felt that it was wrong to fight a war against the king and the British empire.

(II) The British and the American Colonies

- At the 18 congressional conference, the delegates from Albany presented the Albany Plan, which was rejected by the delegates.
- The British and the American colonies had several differences:
 - The British government was a centralized government with a strong central authority.
 - The American colonies were a decentralized system with a strong local authority.
 - The British government was a monarchy, while the American colonies were a republic.
 - The British government was a unitary system, while the American colonies were a federal system.
 - The British government was a centralized system, while the American colonies were a decentralized system.
 - The British government was a unitary system, while the American colonies were a federal system.
